Only kidnappers to die

19 DAYS TO CHRISTIANITY'S BEST LOVED FEAST

The rush by some, this one at the former Plaza in Cebu, Quezon City, is one up a familiar portrait of what Christmas is all about: A celebration one does not right in the time the it is called like this

ONLY CONVICTED kidnappers, and not all death row convicts such as rapists and drug dealers, will be subjected to a public execution, Malacañan clarified yesterday.

The clarification further intensified criticism that President Manlapig Arroyo's lifting of the moratorium on the death penalty was intended to appease the 26-year-old Philippine community, which had expressed its anger over the government's seeming inability to dismantle kidnapping for ransom gangs.

"The lifting of the moratorium is only for those convicted of kidnapping for ransom activities," said Executive Secretary Alberto Fernandez. "For those who are not kidnappers, we recommended a reprieve."

Justice Undersecretary Jose Calida also said "it would be better" if convicted kidnappers were executed first.

"The kidnapping problem" is the reason for all this clamor for the lifting of the moratorium, he said.

Fernandez said that the decision to limit the death penalty to kidnapers was part of a "package" and that it was not intended upon the possibility of the Chinese-Philippine community or its connection with the Church.

The President's announcement Friday that she would no longer block judicial execution drove first from kidnapping. An anti-death penalty advocate said the Manlapig's move appeared to be

FPJ is opposition coalition's official candidate

By Michael Lim-Uloc

THE PRANKSTER search for the opposition presidential standard-bearer ended at dusk yesterday with the selection of popular movie star Fernando Poe Jr. by a coalition of opposition parties consisting of the Union ng Demokratikang Pilipino, PDP-L

Union and the Pwersang ng Masa. Former Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile, who chaired the five-man nominating committee appointed by the coalition of opposition parties, made the announcement at a press conference at the new Manila Hotel in Manila as headed by LDP president Edgardo Angara, Senate Minority Leader

Wences Soto III and officials of the three political parties. Enrile said his committee had no choice but to declare Poe the de facto presidential candidate of the coalition after Sen. Pacifico Lacson chose to get out of the "selection process" when he had himself proclaimed a presidential candidate by an LDP faction last Thursday. "Because there is only one person left to seek the nomination" with the coalition, the committee is duty-bound to recognize this fact. We will consider FPJ as the person who is going to be the standard-bearer of the opposition," said Enrile. Enrile said opposition leaders

Apollonio Fernandez and Gregorio Honasan, who had earlier asked to be considered, had chosen "the interim" in pursuing their presidential ambitions. He said the coalition would make the formal announcement of the candidacy of Poe, widely known as "Da King" or "FPJ," on

Out of the ashes, Iligan rises to fulfill a mission

By Tina Arnes-Danilo

ILIGAN CITY is the envy of other cities, having the lowest crime rate in the region.

It wasn't always so.

Until sometime in January 2001, Iligan City, known as the "City of the Rising Sun," was notorious for having the highest crime rate in the region.

The rampant crime along with alleged drug trafficking, drug use and gambling, which had side by side with the children of some 300 families, most of whom were out of school.

Then on Sept. 28, 2002, the eve of the Iligan City fiesta, a fire broke out, leaving 258 families homeless.

It could have been the final nail on the coffin for the residents of Iligan City. But what the city did was to rise from the ashes of the 2002 General Election, one of the 100 cities in the country, which received the award for the best city in the Philippines.

No less than United Nations Secretary General Kofi Annan acknowledged Iligan City as having made "a moral and significant contribution to the peace and stability of the Philippines."

The tragedy brought to life the dying "resurrection" spirit of the residents, the private sector, government organizations and the local government units. They all joined the way for the country's biggest integrated social and housing program, dubbed the Manilaville project.

Iligan Mayor Franklin M. Quijano led the campaign to pool funds and resources to relocate the affected families, taking his cue from the success of the General Election program of the Governor for Christ.

250 say after office employees, 20-year-old Juan Hernandez "Lito" Magalana makes up at 5:30 in the morning to make sure that he gets to work by 9.

And yet his office is just beside his bedroom.

Unlike with Add Malinao, a rare genetic metabolic disorder that affects only about 10,000 worldwide, Lito says that much time because his muscles have been so weakened that he cannot even climb out of bed without an assist.

He needs constantly to help him to bathe, sometimes alone, and then get dressed. He also has to go through a series of stretching exercises to maintain flexibility in his leg and arm muscles.

By the time his morning routine is over, it's almost 9 a.m.—time to start his work as a web designer.

People like Lito who have the progressive and often fatal Pompey disease are born with deficient amounts of the enzyme that breaks down excess glycogen. Because of the lack of this precious enzyme, the glycogen that should have been converted to energy is accumulated in the muscles and eventually impairs muscle function.

'Chokepoints' sprout Monday

By Tiberius

MORE THAN 10,000 policemen will be "checking the streets" of Metro Manila tomorrow as government authorities lay down a long-term plan to curb kidnapping and high-profile crimes.

They will be manning "chokepoints," or temporary checkpoints, and conducting mobile checkpoints in the 11 city- and province-level divisions leading to Metro Manila and other areas.

Starting at 6 a.m., the police will be setting up roadblocks in these cities to stop and inspect vehicles for the purpose of "maintaining a law-abiding and peaceful system," said Police Director General Romeo B. Manzano.

Officers hit PMA bias in revamp

MANILA had the last word on the ongoing revamp of the Philippine Military Academy (PMA), triggered by a major controversy over the alleged bias of police officers in the revamp.

A group calling itself the Police Officers' Association (POA) has filed a petition with the Commission on Human Rights (CHR) to investigate the alleged bias of police officers in the revamp.

The POA said that the revamp of the PMA was biased against police officers and that the police officers were being discriminated against in the revamp.

General's punishment too lenient, say Sarajevans

General Rasim Delic. AP

SARAJEVO—Sarajevans slammed the 20-year jail term handed down on a Bosnian Serb general Friday as too lenient, as they evoked the memory of the roughly 300,000 people who were killed in the city during the 1992-95 siege of the Bosnian capital.

"The sentence is too mild compared to what he did to us," said Simko Pribic, a 49-year-old man who was severely wounded during the 1992-95 siege of the Bosnian capital.

"He was a war criminal, a war criminal, a war criminal," he said.

Delic, 49, a colonel in the Bosnian Serb army, was sentenced to 20 years in prison for his role in the siege of the Bosnian capital. In addition, he was sentenced for the shelling of the open-air Muslim market in July 1994 in which 60 people were killed and 140 wounded.

But people who lived through the nightmare and the UN had failed to bring justice to those who were killed or injured during the siege.

"There is nothing of the measure taken in Bosnia," he said.

Zimbabwe says 'to hell' with Commonwealth

MANITOBA, Zimbabwe—Zimbabwe's ruling party came out in strong support Friday of President Robert Mugabe's threat to quit the Commonwealth, with Vice President Joseph Mumba saying "to hell" with the club from which the southern African country has been suspended for close to two years.

Mugabe, opening the party's annual conference, told the 2,000 in attendance that Zimbabwe "must break away from the Commonwealth" for the club's members grouping unfairly backing a common to Mugabe.

Several senior senior party officials said Zimbabwe did not need the Commonwealth as a club and the members of the ruling Zimbabwe African National Union-Political Front (ZANU-PF) demonstrated against the Commonwealth outside the conference venue in the southern town of Harare, a party stronghold.

"If the club wants to leave, then let it leave and we will be a member of the Commonwealth as a result with our sovereignty and the membership of the Commonwealth," he said, for the Commonwealth to go, Mugabe declared.

The huge crowd of party loyalists erupted with chants of support as he repeated the same claim for state media that week—that Zimbabwe is prepared to "go anywhere" in the Commonwealth but not to be a member.

Merchandise beginnings

The festival has its beginnings in 1992 when the local government set up Christmas booths for public presentation in order to transform the place into a destination where families can gather for some "quality Christmas time" together outside their residences.

Inspired by the leaders of people who took part in the festival, the local government decided to expand the presentation by drawing in local artists to create a festival.

Since then, the festival has evolved the presentation to show the festival spirit as a celebration of local artists.

It could be said, therefore, that more than the festival, artistry and imagination are the independent businesses that have made the festival a truly Christmas celebration.

Funding integrity

Like the transformation of the city of coming up with the festival and symbols, the festival has evolved the presentation to show the festival spirit as a celebration of local artists.

For the year, the municipality has a budget for the festival. The festival is actually a contest in four categories. The main category that produces the top prize is on the 15th night.

Sports fans in the dark over SEAG telecast

By Marc Anthony Reyes

WTF is there in the telecast coverage?

Filipino sports fans were asking this question after the much-awaited opening ceremony of the 22nd Southeast Asian Games in Vietnam Friday night were cut down on local television.

Anchor of Sports Radio 105.7 FM said they have been overtopped with calls and text messages asking when the SEAG action would be telecast so they get their questions only from newspapers.

The National Broadcasting Network (NBN-4) started showing highlights of the games only yesterday afternoon, with Asian TV handling the coverage.

Asian TV has also reportedly been tapped by the Philippine Olympic Committee to televise the 2001 SEAG which the country will host.

Still, sports fans could not understand why the network showing the parade of Filipino athletes were not shown live on TV.

NBC president Gabe Lerner earlier said the SEAG coverage wouldn't be as comprehensive as before due to the stiff fees required by the Vietnamese organizers.

A ham that is 100% delicious

THE ART of ham-making dates back beyond years ago to both the East and the West. In ancient China, where peasants only ate pork on special occasions, giving a hog's head was a gesture of friendship and respect. Modern-day food historians trace the art of ham-making to the ancient Chinese of the Han Dynasty, who used to hang hams in the sun to dry them.

It is not just the art of ham-making that is a tradition in the Philippines. But the fact remains the ancient art of ham-making is still a part of the most delicious food in the country.

CCC, a meat processing company known for its Hamlet brand, tells us the process has been around for centuries. And what makes the CCC Hamlet brand 100 percent delicious?

It starts with the selection of pork. CCC selects only the best quality pork, which is then processed to ensure it is safe and healthy to eat.

"We say it is that all meat naturally comes from the same source, that is, the pig. But the difference is in the quality of the meat. CCC selects only the best quality pork, which is then processed to ensure it is safe and healthy to eat."

"After the selection of meat, the next step is to cure it. This is a process where the meat is placed in a curing solution, which is a mixture of salt, sugar, and spices. This process takes about 10 days to complete."

The cured meat is then cooked in a special solution, which is a mixture of salt, sugar, and spices. This process takes about 10 days to complete.

Only kidnapers to die, Malacañang clarifies

By Mary Joy A. Dela Cruz

A promise to avoid the support of the Chinese Filipino community for his run for election in 2004.

The problem of being considered a kidnapper has emerged as the leading issue in the presidential polls. Binondo said the line is too narrow in January was likely to be a kidnapping sustained between 12 and 18 months ago. He said that under the law, a death sentence would be final only after one year or 18 months after the conviction.

"We believed that," he said. Malacañang has refused to identify those suspected for the crime, citing the Revised Penal Code stating that death sentences could be imposed only on the convicted.

The President's spokespersons have also pointed out that this rule, including the ban on media interviews with kidnappers, was already violated by the release of Lou Telengado.

At the same time, Binondo was accused on Feb. 8, 1996, that the Filipino was put to death by the United Nations.

No order yet
But while the Department of Justice would prefer that none of the kidnappers die, Binondo said it had yet to receive from Malacañang an order to that effect. He said what the DOJ had said was a copy of the President's order on Binondo, stating the same.

He also said the Bureau of Corrections (Biro) had yet to receive a copy of the order of its execution. What the Bureau said the DOJ was the list of death sentences issued by the Supreme Court, Binondo.

Who's first?

"Who will be the first? That is not something we can say at the moment because we will wait to see what the court eventually decides the order will decide.

binondo said of the order, "Can he die?"

He also said that the DOJ had not recommended to Malacañang any names who should be executed first.

Binondo said Binondo's lawyers said that the first death sentence should be imposed on Binondo after the filing of the arrest warrant with the police.

He did not clarify the order's intent, but said the date of conviction was Jan. 3 last 96, as earlier reported.

EU concerned

The European Union has expressed concern over the President's decision to lift the restrictions on the death penalty, the sign after Secretary Binondo said in a statement.

Only said human rights advocates United Nations called on him to ensure the EU's long-standing and firm position against capital punishment.

He said the "democratic" movement was not "unpopular."

"I am [Binondo] the opportunity to make his representation, during which he has also received the strong support of the EU for the success of our government to fight crime, except, of course, at the time of the death penalty," Ople said.

"We have from our discussions that the EU understands, although it disagrees with our decision to lift the restrictions on the death penalty, it was also aware that the EU understands the traditional position of the EU on this matter. It is regrettable that we are in disagreement, but we agreed to continue to keep our lines of communication open on this issue open, and to have no intention of changing our position," Ople said.

Ople said he and the author, index his comments on the matter.

While the President has an personal view, it is a matter of several things, in the taking of human lives in this manner," he said. "However, until there is a clear preponderance of the evidence against the death penalty, it will be up to the state to exercise the prerogative available to it, and which it now is, to help protect its people."

Agreed for weeks

Binondo said the President had agreed for "months" on the matter, particularly all during the last year.

"The President has the duty to balance in moral position against the need to protect its people from irreparable human losses," he said.

According to Binondo, the President "agreed" for weeks on his decision because the law is deterministic, who is personally against the death penalty on moral grounds."

He said the President had told his ground against the death penalty despite an earlier commitment to push through with it, in the case of kidnappers and drug pushers.

Duty-bound

"The situation has reached a point where the President is challenging the core of power and order in our society," Binondo said.

He said the President was duty-bound to serve the people by giving them an option to "justification" and suppressing "the sentiment of the silent majority."

"The gray that the death penalty of law decision would continue to be achieved," he said.

Binondo also said to his Macapagal administration, saying, "Our position in the DOJ is that there is a law and order it is intended, we should enforce it."

Rule of law

"This is part of our respect for the rule of law. This is not something that is new. This is the principle of the state. There is no compromise. They were given due process, trial, and the Supreme Court affirmed their sentence."

Time to get tough

Delos Regis, President Binondo and Gloria Regis, Binondo's wife, said the President was determined to follow the law and would not waver on the death penalty.

Binondo said his Macapagal would not call for improvement of the death penalty, for almost three years, only for Binondo recently around the people.

"It is time to get tough now," he said. "That's the law. The President has no choice. It is only Congress that can abolish death penalty. The lobby is in Congress, not with the President."

Loaded

Binondo said his Macapagal for the decision.

"The law is loaded, but that is the law," he said.

Binondo said those opposed to the death penalty had been upholding the human rights of criminals. "But what about the human rights of the law-abiding citizen? The same rights should be applied to all," he said. (PNA report from Quezon City, Binondo)

Business/Finance Editor Margie Quijano-Espino

Doc learned about finance at 5, under her dad's desk

By Margie Quijano-Espino

HER reputation may grow as her and her image in the halls of the population is the "bakula" who makes our people's food, makes better looking din.

Since she brought in machines to help change her person look and advertised them, many of her colleagues have questioned her ethics and some have even tried to discredit her by saying she is a medical doctor.

But a chat with Vicki tells another story. FIRST JOB

Very young age by the experience her adaptive person gave her. She learned in experience and understanding of major business deals since she was 5. She learned about investing by the time she was 10 and then learned how to sell in growing the Delta Medical Group, one of the largest medical centers in the country today.

Early exposure

"Vicki recalls that her adaptive is, this—invest, learn and understand business early. —Eugene Dela, would pick her up from school and bring her to his office.

While he and his colleague, other business leaders like Llanito Sison-Sison and Juan Ponce Enrile, would talk business, the 5-year-old Vicki would be under her father's desk just listening to get inside-the-business deals.

She was first learning how her father trading business. The business paper per then, she also seemed to invest in the stock market.

Her father would bring her to meetings with business leaders and when she heard them talk about San Miguel Corp.'s stock offerings in the '80s, she wanted to invest in it.

First investment

She copied her piggy bank and asked her father to invest all her savings in San Miguel shares. Her father indulged her, but longer made more than she. It was a status for piggy bank funds could get.

"I would get a kick operating the newspaper and checking the price of my made." Vicki recalls.

She says the left her parents did not really talk about making money. The lessons it was her biological mother, Chit Garcia, the sister of her adoptive mother, who was business-minded. But her adoptive mother, Susan Dela, taught her the strategy of doing business. Susan would bring the young Vicki to her used grocery and make her eye for money.

"My mother would ask me to type a letter. And despite all the mistakes, she would pay me at the end of the day. My dad also worked at the travel agency and were given pay envelopes at the end of the day," she says.

It was also Susan who provided her with formal training for business.

"She trained me at saving up on property looking and even money," Vicki recalls.

Sugar flowers

It was because of sugar flowers that she got her looking.

"Whenever you go to parties, every body lights up the sugar flowers on the table. I was probably the only child who did not know how to compete. So I decided to learn how to make sugar flowers," says Vicki.

She studied in Tokyo Department looking classes and learned how to look. She discovered that she not only had all the sugar flowers she wanted, but she also found a way to become popular in school.

"I was hot and more famous than I wanted to be like the other kids making girls in Assumption who were popular. I brought food to school—sugar with honey—and everybody would come to me. I became popular," she recalls.

Her looking business lasted several years. During the first year, her mother, who enrolled regularly, would bring home a whole basket full of ingredients—sugar, chocolate chips, cream, walnuts, etc.—which is what she could only be learned about.

During her first year, she did not do any savings and spent her goods at school—usually much lower than the cost of the ingredients. The 1980s was an apple pie, or a time when you cannot even find apples anywhere.

"I had lots of orders," she says, meeting with her aunt and her parents' visits.

But after a year, her mother cut down with her and taught her how to do proper pricing.

and puts it to the test: sell 2000 copies, 50% of small-company books. Playboy-shots are 2 cents to $16.21 on Amazon or the New York Book Exchange.

In such a climate, it's not surprising that investors viewing the adult entertainment sector might be called to mind. Playboy, for example, is a classic.

Focusing on TV

Playboy has been a long way since 1953, when Hugh Hefner, then 27, launched $1,000 to $10,000 a month Playboy magazine and created the first issue of his Chicago apartment.

Chicago-based Playboy has focused on the adult TV market, and its profits should be roughly $25 million from $10 million in 2002, helped in part by advertising from the anniversary issue, as Hefner is 50 years in terms of past advertising.

With magazine publishing, Playboy has created a mature business, Hefner hopes for growth in digital adult TV, sex, and other topics. Playboy has been a success story, and its spin-off and Playboy TV show.

Since acquiring the adult TV network in mid-2001, Playboy's adult TV network has increased 27 percent to $104 million in 2002 from $74 million in 2001.

The past five years have been on its own terms. Playboy fought out its own path through the last six months of 2002, increased TV revenue to $25 million from $10 million in 2001.

Last year, revenue from TV and video surpassed publishing for the first time. This year, the Internet group, which had been a loss leader, began turning a profit.

Playboy has managed to maintain a steady stream of profits, especially in the magazine area. This, probably, the best of all worlds, and that has created a whole new world, and maybe some more.

Playboy magazine has been a symbol of the sexual revolution in the 1960s, but now, in 2003, its circulation has fallen to about 50 percent to 3.2 million. The magazine has recently been fighting off a wave of heavy competition, including News, USA and USA, as well as its own advertising slump.

Playboy is pushing into adult TV and the Internet, Hefner said. Playboy has a bright future ahead of it.

"I think we have realized our position in the present market. We have a lot of opportunities for us. We have a lot of opportunities for us. We have a lot of opportunities for us."

Cardinal Ceramics reproduces on plates the works of selected masters for Ayala Foundation

By Barry Pflueger
 Contributing Writer

WHEN in Europe or the United States, pause before you grab that unique porcelain plate off the store shelf. You could be bringing home to the Philippines something that was made here in the first place.

In some time now, collector porcelain plates from Italy, France, Cardinal Ceramics have been making their way in fine homes in the US, Britain, Belgium, Italy, France, Germany and other countries. Motivated by two significant factors, Cardinal's owners are, nevertheless, eyes-and-the like have been meeting the aesthetic and functional standards of well-known names in home decor.

Three years ago, Cardinal porcelain was created out of an idea when the Ayala Foundation, Inc. commissioned the company to reproduce the works of selected masters on specially produced plates. Distinctly square, the 11 cm x 11 cm plates have become collector's items.

In 2000, leading portrait painter Fernando Galicano is the featured artist, after Basilio in 2001 and Anita Maguway in 2002. A member of the American Portrait Society who has earned an entry to Who's Who in Business Annual Art (1996-1997) (International edition), Galicano presents a mother and child against a garden backdrop. Aside from the fact that such themes are best in so painstakingly executed and measured to color, the composition really makes a statement in the viewer's heart because of the talent in the colors. It is that moment when a child begins to see beyond himself and wants to recognize the talent in the colors that his mother.

Centers of excellence

Entitled "Mastering Insights," the Galicano painting displayed in the Ayala Foundation, Inc. has been reproduced not only in quality porcelain plates from Cardinal Ceramics but also in notebooks and note cards now being sold in Ayala Museum located in the Galleria 7 and Casimiro. Porcelain home sales will be used for the operation of the Center of Excellence in Public Elementary Education in Cebu, a school for bright public school children from nearby schools operated by Ayala Foundation.

Currently, Cebu has two campuses—in Toledo and in Ramon. Butagay, More Cebu schools are being planned around the country where more than 100,000 children are being educated.

According to Kate Ocasio, production development director of Cardinal Ceramics, the Galicano plate is not that tall makes the use of time, as well as the materials, even and abundant. He notes that he has a porcelain plate made from a mix of special clay from Britain, Australia and Brazil and baked for over 70 hours to give it the strength of high-grade porcelain of international quality.

To produce the plate, special machines first formed the raw clay into the distinct square shape. The plates were then trimmed, polished and fired. The first time for 12 hours. Next, the plates were dipped in a glaze and baked again for another 12 hours. Only then were details or special orders with reproductions of the Galicano piece attached to each plate.

Artist's autograph

Galicano himself took the time to sign the back of the first 100 plates earmarked for the first 100 buyers either in the Galleria 7 or in the Ayala Museum. Beyond the reach of cell phone signals and email will be looked and looking porcelain destined for houses. The entire used special hand and cement ink. With characteristic discipline, he put his mark on the back of each plate with four initials—over a hundred times.

Each signature demanded that he hold the plate for about two minutes while working with the special ink, a process that is as required that he stretch his back after each signature to relieve his muscles.

Both the plates with and without signatures were then arranged in the same way for a final two-hour stretch to permanently affix all additional. Indeed in traditional ceramic boats with the clayworker and even his all generations, the plates were finally polished into individual bowls designed for used and covered with soft and fine materials.

HOT Carabao porcelain are made from a special mix of clay from Britain, Australia and local.

THE PLATES are white after they are fired for the first time for 12 hours.

AFTER they are returned and polished, the porcelain is fired in a specially built oven at 1200 c. More than water boils at 100.

RP on the map

While Carabao believes there is a market abroad for Carabao porcelain featuring its production of Philippine art, it is the firm's dilemma that it already paying the Philippines in the home economy and direct map. Carabao's line of blue-and-white dinner and serving plates, for instance, is carried by Target stores throughout the US. The company has also produced pieces for Fortson's high-end Millery and Park as well as Lamon, an American brand that distributes the porcelain-maker worldwide.

Carabao also has other products prototypes that become the inspiration for outside line of dishes. He shows these to residents abroad, where he visits once a year. If they like what they see, the residents will work better on the home-refining certain pieces while adding others to suit the tastes of their particular markets.

Carabao's big hit in the world market has not been the white ceramic line, each coming with a pattern-made native basket, and the famous leaf series. The latter displays the perfect union of the basket leaf and has become the brand's "signature" for the creation of dishes of the smaller upscale restaurants in Manila and other world capitals.

Carabao's latest baby is the brown ceramic line, inspired by the old-shaped wooden shell of local mussels, like that, but a different piece in ceramic. "We never go wrong when you copy from nature," smiles Carabao.

BECAUSE the length of having and the intensity of love affect the outcome of the final colors, painting one's art is not nearly the same. Only plates that pass the quality test are offered to the public.

THE SAUCER is thrown in special process called decoration are done much and the plate.

LIVING special ink, under Roman Gullon's design for 100 pieces are by one for the first 100 buyers. The plates are then fired in a kiln for 12 hours to give it a finish.

MACHINES mold the clay into the desired shape.

THEY are dipped in glass, then fired a second time for 12 more hours.

How 'Godzilla' became a billboard model

I USED to think that billboards were just another form of rivalry overload, cluttering the open space around the major highways of the city. With their high wattage energy lights, they provide, at the very least, enough illumination for five blocks on both sides of the road. And as in the monopoly board game, Edna and South Super are the Pacific Place and Inland Empire locations of the billboard industry. Since billboards are visible daily to millions of motorists and commuters, are they really as effective as advertising mediums?

Still, since the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corp. (HSBC) billboard featuring an Coca-Cola can and a bottle of beer, huge ones were posted along Kowloon. I got to many such billboards and signs. The latest billboard was a woman, and it was wanted for advance sale, according to those "what was on the lip". Even my smiling, down-to-earth buddy, Kato Kiyomasa, who has no shortage of billboards himself, called to congratulate me for being the source poster guy. If she wasn't such a good friend, that phone call would have been the equivalent of Muhammad Ali calling Manny Pacquiao to congratulate him because she was such a better champion.

How to the world of advertising. Linkage is called the core message and impact of a billboardposting. But, when you face an eye caught in pink, red, multi-colored eye-catching and false eye-catching or better to say, as effect directly much eye by making yourself to be thinking, the viewer have a double look to make realize that it is not. Although who do would actually look like that but not? What do let him, viewer?

At the photo session for the ad, top commercial photographer Todd Wobbe and his stylist and rock diva Barbie Corra asked me to look exactly, with eyes as wide as possible.
